

Common Sense Parenting Series

Please plan to attend all 3 sessions

Instructed by: Brian Satterfield, Training Coordinator
Orangewood Children & Family Center

This series trains foster parents and caregivers on how to deal with children who have varying degrees of social skills deficits. Children who have been abused, neglected, or have experienced an unstable home life often develop maladaptive behaviors that lead to truancy, drug addiction, and failure in many of their relationships. These children need help and a strategy to get them back on track. Caregivers can be facilitators for positive change.

Parents will be able to:

- Identify a child's social skills strengths and weaknesses and teach to them in a purposeful and time-proven method.
- Implement techniques to improve a child's overall behavior and provide greater opportunities for successful outcomes through social skills training.

March 6, March 13, & March 20
