APA Citation Guide 6th ed.

There are two kinds of APA citations: In-text (or parenthetical) and bibliographic.

In-text or parenthetical citations provide brief sources of information and correspond to the full citation in the bibliographic list (titled References in APA).

Example of an in-text citation in APA:
- Nazario (2007) traveled throughout Mexico retracing Enrique’s steps.

Example of an APA in-text citation for quotation:
- The author stated she "traveled more than 1,600 miles, half of that on the top of trains" (Nazario, 2007, p. xix).

Bibliographic citations provide all of the information belonging to the source and correspond with the in-text citation. In APA the bibliographic list is titled References.

Example of an APA bibliographic citation:

When available, use all of the information provided to create bibliographic citations:

Student Name
Saddleback College

The title, or shortened version of it if more than 50 characters, in all caps should appear on all other pages without Running head.

The Abstract should begin on a new page and include the header information.

Insert Running head and the title of the paper in the Header ONLY on the Title Page.

Information for the Title Page is centered on the upper half of the page, is double-spaced, and includes:

Title: Sub-title
Author
Institution Affiliation

Insert page numbers in Header starting with the Title Page.
References are listed in alphabetical order by author’s last name or the first citation element if there is no author. They are double-spaced and use a hanging indent.
